DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Robert C. Resh House is located on Cove Road at the junction of Griffith Road. Cove Run runs SE of the house. The house is near the center of the small farming community of Cove.

The house is a two-story, gable-roofed dwelling with an asymmetrical gable-end facade. The facade points NE. A one-story, shed-roofed porch runs the length of the facade. A one-story, shed-roofed addition runs the length of the SE elevation and a one-story, shed-roofed garage runs the length of the NW elevation.

The house rests on a foundation of large bricks and is covered with white asbestos shingles. Most windows are modern one over one sash with modern storm windows; however, older two over two sash windows remain in some openings on the NW, SW, and SE elevations, and the NE elevation of the addition. On the first floor of the facade, two large windows have narrow upper sashes and large square lower sashes, but the glass has been replaced with two layers of glass sandwiching false muntins. All windows have simple cornices and plainboard surrounds. The facade has two doors. One is placed at the SE end, with a one over one sash window to the NW. The other door is centered between the two windows with false muntins at the other end of the facade.

The roof is covered with asphalt shingles. The house has two stone chimneys, one of brick at the center of the house, and one exterior cinder-block chimney near the center of the NW elevation. The facade porch is supported by turned posts. The garage has a three-part folding door. Each door has a four light window and two panels below. The NE elevation of the garage has a false front.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This house is somewhat unusual in that it has a gable-end facade; however, its position may be due to the house's location at the base of Griffith Road. The garage is of an uncommon type for a rural area of Garrett County.
